

Be the Change...

The Heritage Institute invites you to participate in the creation of a paradigm shift for our times.

The Challenge

As little as fifty years ago few imagined the world we live in today that faces huge risks and enormous changes in all spheres of human activity—economy, environment, human health, social equality, and government. Questions like “Is the world falling apart? Is there a realistic possibility for the world we want?” are in the minds of our young people as they seek their futures. As educators we need to ask how best to prepare our youth for these uncertain times.

The Offering

Be the Change is an informative, interactive workshop that helps teachers and students understand this time in history, and—however bad things look—states an authentic case for hope. This presentation examines the environmental, social justice and human wellness issues of our times not as separate issues but as various facets stemming from a common cause: the prevailing misperception in modern society that we are separate from each other and from the natural world.

This view can and is changing. Importantly, education has a crucial role to play in moving from a world of separateness, competition and scarcity to one of unity, cooperation and sufficiency for all.

Lecture, group interactions and multi-media highlight national and world leaders to bring participants on a journey from global crisis to opportunity. Structured around four questions— Where are We? How did We Get Here? What are Some Possibilities for the Future? Where do We Go from Here?—the process makes participants aware of the new paradigm of interconnectedness of all life. This is reinforced with recent scientific data about the origins of the universe and of all life.

The real star of Be the Change is the impressive assembly of activists, scholars, indigenous leaders and change-makers gathered together in an educational symposium. The presentation includes video segments of Nobel Prize winner Archbishop Desmond Tutu; former Secretary of Labor Robert Reich; indigenous activists Tom Goldtooth and Jeannette Armstrong; and many other change-makers who both inform and inspire.

Be the Change is also known as Awakening the Dreamer, Changing the Dream. It was developed by the Pachamama Alliance in their mission to alter the dream of the modern world away from a disconnected, high consumption and unsustainable mode toward an environmentally sustainable, socially just, and spiritually fulfilling human experience on Earth.

Principal Trainers

President of The Heritage Institute (THI), Mike Seymour is the lead presenter and trainer for Be The Change, along with Ann Amberg and Julie Bora, fellow THI staff members.

Training Your School and District Team

Be The Change becomes an effective tool for learning and transformation when a school or school district takes on the curriculum through a train-the-trainer program. Being trained to make school and community presentations of Be The Change is a powerful project for teachers and student leaders.

The training can be given to groups of 15 to 200 people. This presentation is appropriate for secondary students, teachers, parents and community members.

Fees

An honorarium of $250 made out to our non-profit arm, Youth for a New World, and reimbursement of all travel expenses for the two presenters.

About the Training

Be The Change is typically offered in a 4-hour program, but can be modified to suit shorter formats. This symposium can be used to provide a broader context of understanding for student projects or service learning that address issues of equity, poverty, human rights, food and water, energy security, green transportation, global and local environmental sustainability as well as human health and wellness.

This rapidly growing symposium is being given in the USA, Canada, UK, Europe, Australia, New Zealand, parts of Africa, China and Japan. It is our intention eventually to form an online discussion network of global youth who have experienced Be The Change and want to share their local action projects with others.

The Heritage Institute

Be The Change as a school presentation is made possible by The Heritage Institute, a progressive program of continuing education for teachers which for over 30 years has brought workshops, field courses, global travel programs and online courses to teachers in the Northwest, the USA and the world.
